Contents

Maps, Figure, and Tables

Introduction: Repatriation, Decolonization, and the Transformations of Postwar Japan

1 New Maps of Asia

  A History of Migration in the Japanese Empire
  Defeat in the Colonies
  Allied Repatriation of the Overseas Japanese
  Conclusion

2 The Co-Production of the Repatriate, 1945–49

  Japanese and American Responses to the Postwar Migration
  The Repatriate Relief Bureau
  The Regional Repatriation Centers
  Responses of the Repatriate Community
  From Imperial Subject into Foreigner
  Conclusion

3 “The Future of the Japanese Race” and “Argumentative Types”: Women from Manchuria and Men from Siberia

  For the Sake of the Future of the Japanese Race
  Reception at Home
  The Return of the “Red Repatriates,” 1949
  Problems at Home
  Soviet Detainees as “Repatriates”
  Repatriation from China, 1948–1972
  Conclusion
Contents

4 “In the End, It Was the Japanese Who Got Us”:
   Repatriates in Literature, Songs, and Film 138
   - Repatriates and Popular Culture 139
   - Early Fictional Treatment of Repatriation 142
   - The End of Colonial Manchuria in 1950s Fiction 147
   Conclusion 164

5 No Longer Hikiagesha: “Orphans and Women Left Behind in China” 167
   - The Movement for Compensation and the Domestication of Repatriation 173
   - Historical Narration, Commemoration, and Bringing Repatriation to an End 178
   - Bureaucratic Efforts in Ending Repatriation 183
   - Orphaned by Empire 184
   Conclusion 187
   - Epilogue: The Postwar History of Tsukada Asae 188

Conclusion: Third Party Decolonization and Post-Imperial Japan 190
   - Repatriation and Deportation in Okinawa 191
   - The “Unmixing of Peoples” in Postwar East Asia in a Comparative Context 195

Reference Matter

Works Cited 211

Index 233